TANGO IN PARIS

The French Connection

The past couple of months have been good for Indian diplomacy. First came Prime Minister Modi's visit to USA, which could be called "path breaking" in many respects, especially in the forging of a long-term relationship and the transfer of key technologies to India. Then was the halt-over in UAE in the return leg of the journey which cemented economic and strategic ties and also incorporated India's Unified Payment Interface, in UAE to enable Rupee-Dirham trade. This will give bilateral trade a big boost and raise the value of the Rupee as global tender.

But perhaps the most significant was his visit to Paris as the Guest of Honor during France's Bastille Day. It is symbolic that three Indian Rafale fighters flew overhead and a contingent of the Punjab regiment marched down the Champs Elysees, as he took the salute. It marked the historical connect of Indo-France ties and the way to the future.

But then Indo-France ties go back a long way. One million Indian soldiers fought in France during World War I; over 2 million participated in different battlefields of World War II. But the association, actually became a strategic partnership 25 years ago (coinciding with the visit), when France forged a strategic partnership with India in 1998, after most western nations shunned it in the aftermath of our nuclear tests. It supported India during the crucial civil-nuclear accord negotiations with USA, and has supplied critical technology and equipment, ranging from Mirage 2000 and Rafale fighters, Scorpene submarines and even nuclear reactors. It even used its veto to squash China's raising of the Kashmir issue in the UNSC, in the wake of the abrogation of Article 370.

This burgeoning relationship, based on sound economic, strategic and historical linkages, received a direction for the future with the unveiling of the "Horizon 2047: 25th Anniversary of the India-France Strategic partnership: towards a Century of India-France Relations. This document outlined a roadmap for cooperation for the next 25 years hinging on the three pillars of "partnerships for security and sovereignty; partnership for the planet; and partnership for the people". The slew of agreements signed by Prime Minister Modi and President Macron reflected that. They included common security concerns in Europe; the need for Regional Security Cooperation in the Indo-Pacific; a deal between Safran and DRDO to develop jet engines for Medium Combat Aircraft and multi-role helicopters; Scorpene submarines to be jointly built by Mazgaon Docks and Naval Group of France and also cooperation in critical technologies like supercomputing, Artificial Intelligence and quantum technology. The two sides also agreed to work together on climate change and green technologies and bolster people-to-people contact by the opening of consulates in Marseille and Hyderabad. This personal contact will be enhanced by the flow of around 30000 Indian students to France by 2030, who have been promised liberal visas and work avenues in France.

Strategic Ties

Although India has strategic ties with 30 countries, France is fast emerging as its most significant strategic partner – perhaps second only to USA. But while India-USA ties are “the most defining partnership of the 21st Century” there is are fears of US propensity to draw its allies completely into its fold and make them toe the line in all respects – as it has with UK and Canada. There is also a tendency by the US to meddle into the internal Affairs of other nations. Although India has tilted towards the USA, its values it ‘strategic autonomy’; greatly – as does France - and will not slavishly follow a US stance. India has held its own in its dealings with Russia during the Ukraine war, and France too has cultivated its own relations with Russia and China, inspite of NATO’s antagonism towards it. France and Germany seem to be of the view, that European security should be slowly delinked from the USA, and for that they need allies such as India. India too, would not like to put all its eggs in one basket. It sees Europe emerging as one of the poles of power of the post-Ukraine war world, and needs to cultivate independent ties with them – especially France and Germany. France can also help fill the role of Russia in the earlier days. Russia’s closeness and dependence to China, implies that it may no longer be the dependable friend and partner it once was. It could succumb to Chinese pressure in its support to India, especially in a crunch

Situation. And then there is the crucial subject of equipment. The Ukraine war has shown the need to diversify defense supplies and move out of the predominantly Russian equipment we now hold. France can fill that void quite well. It has emerged as the second largest supplier of defense equipment to India accounting for 29 percent of our defense imports between 2018-22. More significantly, the technology it offers is a generation higher than that provided by Russia, and unlike the USA, it has no qualms about sharing it. For example, while the US-India deal for the transfer of GE F414 jet engines for India's Light Combat Aircraft was much touted, it came with a caveat. It did not include the transfer of a critical part of the technology. France, on the other hand offered the Safran engine with a 100 percent technology transfer that would enable complete production here, and also make the technology available for other uses.

There is also synergy in two other vital issues – the Indo-Pacific and the Ukraine War. India and France acknowledged the “special responsibility to ensure peace and stability in the Indo-Pacific” and both are aware of the long-term security threat emerging from China. France has a large presence in the Indo-Pacific with over 1.5 million citizens in its islands of Caledonia, La Reunion and French Polynesia. France has been undercut in AUKUS where its proposal to supply nuclear submarines to Australia was scuttled by USA and UK to provide their own. But, it could become a major member of QUAD plus, and its clout will enhance the grouping greatly. Even in the Ukraine War, while the US led western allies seem to feel that the only satisfactory end is the complete defeat of Russia, France is willing to accommodate Russia's security concerns – a view that India shares. Perhaps India and France (along with Germany) can help bring some end to hostilities and prevent Europe from further carnage.

There are tremendous commonalities in our economic and security vision, and the path ahead seems to be well marked out with the joint statement that the two sides released. But there are still hiccups. For starters, Indo-French trade is a paltry $12.5 Billion – a fraction of what it could be. The incorporation of UPI in Europe, through Lyra, a French payment service, will give it a huge boost. But there is also a need to hammer out an India-EU Free Trade Agreement. That can raise the figure to around $100 billion by the end of the decade.

It was a little surprising that the joint document also did not mention the deal for the purchase of 26 Rafale M aircraft for INS VIRAT and VIKRAMADITYA, or the joint construction of three Scorpene submarines – a mammoth Rs 80,000 Crores program that had been cleared by the Defense Ministry and was expected to be announced with much fanfare in Paris. But then defense acquisitions have long gestation periods and this one is likely to fructify later.

There is great promise in the French connection. By engaging powers like France, Germany, Japan, UAE and others, we are developing economic and security linkages with diverse powers that will help us in the multi-polar world that seems to be gradually emerging. It also helps wean us off Russia, whose ability to provide defense equipment and strategic support will weaken after a while. And while we would be aligned to USA, these alliances help hedge our bets and maintain our much-vaunted strategic autonomy. That is the best guarantor of our economic and strategic security in the times to come.

CAPACITY THE KEY TO GREATNESS

Leadership skills need to be updated to reach its full potential and effectiveness. Possessing leadership skills is not enough to make you an effective leader. There is a need to develop and build capacity. Without building capacity as a leader, there cannot be effective leadership delivery. Your job as a leader is to make it a habit to develop your capacity.

Capacity is an individual potential power, ability, and competence to produce results at a certain level. Without capacity, you will lack the potential power to produce results as a leader. When you develop your capacity as a leader, your productivity level will increase. Your effectiveness as a leader is determined by your level of capacity building. Your worth as a leader is determined by the capacity you build. A leader without capacity will attract no value. The value your followers place on you is determined by your effectiveness and capacity to produce results. Great leaders take time to build and develop their capacity for years. Capacity makes you outstanding and indispensable as a leader. Pay the price to build capacity. Build capacity to solve problems. Your ability to solve problems makes you an effective leader. This is what attracts people to follow you. The capacity of a leader is measured by problem-solving skill. This unique skill, when developed, can make you relevant and outstanding.

Your worth is a function of the capacity you develop. As a leader, don't look for people or money. Build capacity to increase your value. This is the magnet that attracts people and money. Capacity building is the pillars of effective leadership; there are many ways to build capacity. I will share some tips with you that can make you an effective leader.

SELF-EVALUATION

As a leader, you need to evaluate yourself adequately. Are you making any progress in your field, organization, or business? You need to highlight what the roadblocks are. You need to know what you are doing right or not doing right. You need to know if you are on the right track or you are going off track. Self-evaluation is very important as a leader. You need to always closely examine your progress and the direction that you are heading towards.

You may have great ideas and brilliant projects. If things are not going as you had planned, then you need to change your method and strategy. There may be something that you are not doing properly. Or there is something you need to be doing. Self-evaluation is a mental exercise that you should always engage in. When you engage in self-evaluation, you should have a paper around you. Because you are bombarding your mind with questions, your mind will give you answers.

PERSONAL/SKILL DEVELOPMENT

You need to read extensively and develop your skills. You need to read as many books and articles that you can read. Attend trainings, seminars and workshops. Develop your literal, communication, entrepreneurial, verbal, and technical and ICT skills. Any opportunity that you have that you can use to develop your skill as leader in your field, you should do it. You can learn any skill that you want to learn. There is no limitation to learning. If you already have some of these skills, you should keep updating and upgrading.

Personal and skill development is a great asset for effective leadership. You become an effective leader with the quality of your leadership skill and competence.

ASSOCIATE WITH GREAT MINDS

Great leaders associate with great minds. As a leader, you should be conscious of your association. You should flock with eagles not chickens if you want to soar. Your association determines how far you will be at the top. Top leaders mingle with people at the top. You need to associate with people that you have similar ideas, goals, mission and vision. Leaders build networks around their lives. You should build a network around your life, business and career. You can join clubs and associations where the kind of people that you admire belong to. There are some people who you can follow on the internet read their books and learn what they are doing to get to where they are.

You cannot achieve your dream and vision alone. You need people who have done what you are trying to do that have succeeded to hold your hands and lead you through the right way to avoid making errors, mistakes and struggles. Your success as a leader is determined by the level of capacity you build in relationships with successful people. Your association determines your elevation and acceleration as leader.

You should engage the principle of sociability. This means associating with the right people that are game changers. You don't need to associate with people who are of the same level with you. You need to associate with people who are better and higher than you. Relate with people who have what it takes to take you to where you want to be in your personal life, business and career. As a leader, you should learn to leverage on other people's intelligence, knowledge and experience to help you become successful. Use their connections and experiences to enhance your value. You need other people's contact and connections to get to the top. Choose your associates and invest in productive relationships.

INTERVIEW

Mr. Manjiet Dhall

Tech Services is a Vadodara, Gujarat, India based System Integration and Service company committed to delivering the best-in-class IT Solutions to help our clients achieve their business goals. The company is founded by Mr. Manjiet Dhall who is enthusiastic and IT specialist who wants to overcome the routine and create a company that can act in the market not only for business success but for the sake of Technology itself. Let's get into the discussion & know more about his vision, mission & goals.

Q. What is your overall philosophy for leading an organization?

A. I believe constant change is the only pathway forward. I intend to motivate my team through goal-setting and overcoming challenges. I will provide guidance and inspiration to improve the team's performance constantly.

Q. How would you rate the importance of transparency in a CEO role?

A. Open, honest communication is a foundational part of good business relationships and team dynamics, so leading with transparency can ultimately have a positive impact on your business. Being open and transparent with your employee's increases employee engagement. This encourages them to succeed through higher performance and productivity while developing a healthy team culture. Employees will feel encouraged to collaborate with their team, share ideas with their managers, and feel a sense of belonging within the workplace.

Q. What method would you use to promote transparency from the top down?

A. Being open about the status and future of your company allows your team to clearly see where they fit within the company's vision to further build upon their current role and look forward to future promotions. These changes may even lead to a strong sense of belonging, boosting retention rates. Another option is to carve out time for sharing mutual goals and ideas outside of one-on-one check-ins or team meetings. If your company is facing challenges, share with your employees as much information as you're comfortable with to further cultivate a safe space and camaraderie during difficult times. By communicating not only positive updates but also company challenges, your team will better understand the status of the company and buy into the company mission.

Q. Can you give an example of how you implemented a change in corporate strategy?

A. Changes are usually implemented to achieve greater efficiency in meeting business goals or to adjust processes for new goals. Implementing change effectively requires change management, which is a process that helps employees prepare for an organizational transition using various resources and strategies. It's recommended that you develop a plan that will gain employee buy-in and provide them with the necessary tools to achieve the intended change.

Q. What type of corporate culture do you aim to promote and how do you create that culture?

A. Organizational culture facilitates the achievement of an organization's strategic objectives, attracts the right employees, and makes those employees who may not fit stand out. The culture can be observed in how decisions are made – top-down or bottom-up; and whether employees are confident to express independent thoughts and feelings without fear of being repudiated. It materializes through its benefits plans and whether employees are recognized and rewarded for excelling at their work.

Q. How has your previous work experiences qualified you to assume the role of CEO at our company?

A. Its almost 3 decades now for me in a senior management, and currently. I have led several project teams, worked with several senior executives, and personally reported to the board. I am also experienced in conflict management and resolution, given my time in the technical & networking department. I believe that all the experience I have gathered through the years put me in a better position to succeed in this role. I, myself has worked on the field for many years, hence, it's easier for me to understand the bottlenecks my team faces today, and can guide them.

Q. Have you ever had to resort to furloughs and layoffs in response to economic issues? If so, how did you approach this situation?

A. Furloughs can be a short-term way to avoid at least some layoffs, a layoff involves a separation from employment when there's a lack of available work, but with the grace of god we have been growing gradually year after year & building a very strong team. I have not yet experience the scenario where the management at Tech Services had to really sit & discuss about furlough or layoffs. We have a very enthusiastic & hard working team.

We wish team Tech-Services best of luck for their future projects & services.

Connect your world securely.

Call us for networking.

recommended to minimize the risk of objections and refusals.

4. Prepare the Application: Complete the application form provided by the trademark office. Provide accurate and complete information as required. Include the representation of the mark in the specified format and provide a clear and concise description of the goods or services. If necessary, consult with an intellectual property attorney or agent to ensure accuracy and compliance with the requirements.

5. Submit the Application: File the completed application with the appropriate trademark office. This can typically be done online or through physical submission, depending on the jurisdiction. Pay the required filing fees at the time of submission. Retain copies of the application and payment receipts for your records.

6. Application Review: After submission, the trademark office will review your application. This involves a formal examination to ensure the application meets the filing requirements, such as proper documentation and payment. If any deficiencies or errors are found, you may be given an opportunity to correct them within a specified timeframe.

7. Examination and Publication: Once the formalities are satisfied, the trademark office will examine the application for substantive issues. This includes assessing the distinctiveness of the mark, potential conflicts with existing marks, and compliance with legal requirements. If the application passes examination, it may be published in an official gazette or trademark journal to allow for opposition by third parties.

8. Registration and Certificate: If no oppositions are raised within the specified timeframe or if they are successfully overcome, the trademark office will approve the application. You will be granted trademark registration, and a certificate of registration will be issued. The registration provides exclusive rights to use the mark for the specified goods or services.

Filing an application for trademark registration

Filing an application for trademark registration involves several steps. Here's an overview of the general process:

1. Determine the Jurisdiction: Identify the jurisdiction(s) in which you want to seek trademark protection.

Trademark registration is typically done at the national level, but there are also regional and international systems available, such as the Madrid System for international trademark registration.

2. Gather Information: Collect the necessary information and documents for the application. This typically includes the applicant's details (name, address, etc.), a representation of the mark (logo, word mark, or both), a description of the goods or services associated with the mark, and any supporting documentation required by the trademark office.

3. Conduct a Trademark Search: Perform a comprehensive search to check the availability and distinctiveness of your proposed mark. This search helps identify potential conflicts with existing trademarks. While not mandatory, it is highly

It's important to note that the timeframe and specific requirements can vary by jurisdiction. Engaging an intellectual property attorney or agent can be helpful in navigating the process and ensuring compliance with the specific filing requirements of your chosen jurisdiction.

Examination and evaluation of trademark applications

The examination and evaluation of trademark applications are conducted by the respective trademark office to determine if the application meets the legal requirements for trademark registration. Here's an overview of the examination and evaluation process:

1. Formal Examination: The trademark office begins by conducting a formal examination to check if the application meets all the filing requirements. This includes verifying that the application form is complete, the required fees have been paid, and all necessary supporting documents have been provided. If any deficiencies or errors are identified, the applicant may be given an opportunity to rectify them within a specified timeframe.

2. Substantive Examination: After the formal examination, a substantive examination is conducted to assess the mark's distinctiveness, potential conflicts with existing trademarks, and compliance with legal requirements. The specific criteria evaluated during the substantive examination can vary by jurisdiction but generally include the following:

a. Distinctiveness: The trademark office assesses whether the proposed mark is distinctive enough to identify and distinguish the goods or services of the applicant from those of others. Marks that are generic, descriptive, or common in the industry may face challenges in meeting this criterion.

b. Conflicts with Existing Marks: The trademark office checks for conflicts with existing trademarks. This involves searching their database and comparing the proposed mark with registered trademarks or pending applications in the same or related fields of goods or services. If a conflict is found, such as a similar or identical mark already registered or pending, the examiner may raise objections or issue a refusal.

c. Compliance with Legal Requirements: The application is evaluated for compliance with legal requirements, such as the proper classification of goods and services, accurate representation of the mark, and adherence to any specific formalities prescribed by the trademark office.

3. Examination Report: If any issues or objections are identified during the examination, the trademark office issues an examination report detailing the concerns and requesting the applicant's response. The applicant is typically given a specified period (often several months) to address the objections raised in the report. The response may involve providing additional evidence, arguments, or amendments to overcome the objections.

4. Publication and Opposition: In some jurisdictions, after the examination and upon the application's preliminary approval, the mark is published in an official gazette or trademark journal. This allows third parties to oppose the registration within a specified period if they believe the mark infringes upon their rights. Opposition proceedings may involve hearings and evidence submissions, and they can delay or prevent the registration of the mark.

. Registration and Certificate: If the application successfully overcomes any objections or oppositions, the trademark office grants registration. The applicant is issued a certificate of registration, confirming their exclusive rights to use the mark for the specified goods or services. The registration is typically valid for a specific period, often renewable indefinitely as long as the mark is in use and renewal fees are paid.

It's important to note that the examination and evaluation process can vary by jurisdiction, and the specific requirements and procedures may differ. Consulting the guidelines and regulations of the relevant trademark office or seeking assistance from an intellectual property attorney or agent can help navigate the process effectively.
